Consultation on petition P-04-341 Waste and Incineration
Response from Dr Dick van Steenis

Dear Committee

Further to my submission of 18 November 2011 regarding waste management and the need for plasma arc gasification instead of incinerators & wind farms on grounds of health, cost etc, I attach a new report from Spain which proves that the "green program" has been a disaster for the economy and for jobs. Will WAG heed this? The report has been censored from the UK media yet it is essential for the WAG. It reinforces what I have been saying all along. I hope you will now allow me to give oral evidence as well on how WAG can save £5BILLION and jobs & health.

Yours sincerely

Dr Dick van Steenis MBBS

Consultation on petition P-04-341 Waste and Incineration

The Obama Administration's 2007 stimulus package included $80 billion for green jobs
Response from Dr Dick van Steenis

"Green energy is not ready for prime time," Seton Motley, president of Less Government, said. "It's not ready for private sector production."

"Everything that requires government money means there's no market for it," he explained. "Because if there was a market for it, there'd be plenty of private capital to invest in it and people saying, 'Let's go forward.'"

The market didn't like General Motors, which faced bankruptcy. Then Washington came to the rescue. Uncle Sam bought 500-million shares of General Motors, which have since lost $15 billion in value.

"I can't think of, off the top of my head, a bigger loser than GM, as far as most money in one place that's going down the tubes," Motley said.

Environmental Dream Buster

The Spanish could have taught the Americans a thing or two about government money down the tubes.

Spain spent billions on an environmental dream that helped make their economy worse and added to the nation's already crushing government debt.

And now Spain's future is looking more like what Greece is facing.
